Sound Activity Meter (SAM)

Good hearing is as much about our environment as it is about our ability to hear. The sounds around us influence how well we can pick out the voices we want to hear. Everybody has difficulty hearing in noisy environments such as in restaurants, parties, and heavy traffic.

SAM is a new type of device—worn like a small pin or brooch for a few days to gather information about your real-life listening environment. It measures how much time is spent at different noise levels and identifies the amount of time spent listening to Speech, Speech in Noise, or Noise only.

The information gathered by SAM is displayed in visual sound maps, known as Envirograms, providing insight and a greater understanding of your individual listening needs.

Technology Update

If your hearing aids are more than 5 years year old, or are not meeting your listening needs, it's time to update your amplification system. Call and make an appointment to discuss current hearing aid technology. The advances are tremendous.
